The children who lived in India three thousand years ago had many things in common with you, even though some of you might look very different things from you. Like you, they also love to eat mango, the banana, the coconut and the tamarind fruit. Like you, they too played with toy carts. They beathed the same Indianess that you do, and they too recognised its scent without having to think about it, just as you do. This means there is something very big and important that has continued in India all these years. What is something?
